Canada's Indian Population Now Mostly Self-Supporting And Is No Longer a Liability

A widespread belief that the Indian population of Canada is decreasing is an error, as there are 104,018 in the Dominion, and official reports show little variation from decade to decade. Incidentally the total number of Indians in Canada is 570,000.

Although there are no millionaires among the "Redskins," the Federal Department of Indian Affairs has been able to show that the Indians are self-sufficient in their own lands. In fact, the Indians are now the largest group of self-sufficient people in the Dominion.

As a result of the Indian Act, the sale of lands, the federal government has been able to provide the Indians with a means of self-sufficiency.
